The 5 Numbers

The five I check before I write anyone a plan. Give me these and I can tell you more than a month of gym selfies ever could.

WHERE EVERY PLAN STARTS

MOST COACHES START WITH A TEMPLATE.

I start with your numbers. These five tell me where you actually are, what is safe to push, and what will tip the balance in your favour. Measure them the way they are written here, track the trend not the day, and bring them to me.

01 Waking resting heart rate

Your most honest readout of recovery, stress and heart health, taken before caffeine, before you even get out of bed. It falls as you get fitter and healthier. It climbs the moment something is off: under-recovered, overreaching, ill, a huge feed too late at night, or a dose pushing your system harder than you think.

HOW TO TAKE IT First thing on waking, lying still. Watch, ring or two fingers on the pulse for 60 seconds. Same conditions every day.

WHAT TO WATCH A baseline creeping up over several days usually means recovery or health is slipping, before anything else shows. Mine has fallen steadily as things got dialled in, and that drop is the proof the plan is working. Where yours should sit is something we work out together.

02 Blood pressure

The silent one. The number that quietly decides whether you are doing long-term damage, and the first thing to go wrong on anything enhanced. Feeling fine tells you absolutely nothing here.

HOW TO TAKE IT A cheap upper-arm cuff, not a wrist one. Sit, rest five minutes, same time of day, take the average of two or three readings.

WHAT TO WATCH Sitting high, and plenty of people do without a clue, is a medical conversation, not something to train through. If you are on TRT or anything beyond it, this is non-negotiable monitoring. What counts as optimal rather than just normal is part of what we set.

03 Waist, fasted

The leanness marker that actually matters. The scale lies when you are building muscle or holding water. The tape around your navel does not. This is the number I judge a cut or a lean gain on, not bodyweight.

HOW TO TAKE IT Fasted, first thing, relaxed. Do not suck in. Around the navel, same spot every time. Once a week.

WHAT TO WATCH Waist holding or dropping while weight climbs means you are adding muscle, not fat. That is exactly what happened taking me from 72kg to 80kg. Waist up with weight up means look at the food first.

THE TWO MOST PEOPLE NEVER CHECK.

Weight is the one everyone watches and the one that lies the most. Bloods are the one almost nobody looks at and the one that tells the truth.

04 Your 7-day weight trend

Daily weight is noise: water, salt, food volume, sleep, stress. The 7-day average is the signal. You judge the line, never the single morning. Most people quit over a number that was never real.

HOW TO TAKE IT Same time daily, fasted, after the bathroom. Take the weekly average and compare week to week, not day to day.

WHAT TO WATCH Lose too fast and you give muscle back. Gain too fast and it is mostly fat going on. Slow is not the compromise, it is the whole point. The exact rate we aim for is set to you.

05 Your bloods

This is where lab-based actually means something. “Normal” on a lab range is not the same as optimal for how you want to look, train and feel. Hormones, metabolic health, lipids and liver markers tell the real story, especially if you are on TRT or thinking about it.

HOW TO TAKE IT A private panel or through your GP. Fasted morning draw. Retest and track it, never guess from how you feel.

WHAT TO WATCH Symptoms sitting next to “normal” bloods, or “fine” bloods you have never actually optimised. The numbers decide, not your mood. Dose and compound decisions always sit with you and your doctor. I help you read and monitor them.

WHAT THESE FIVE TELL ME

Numbers decide. Not your mood, and not mine.

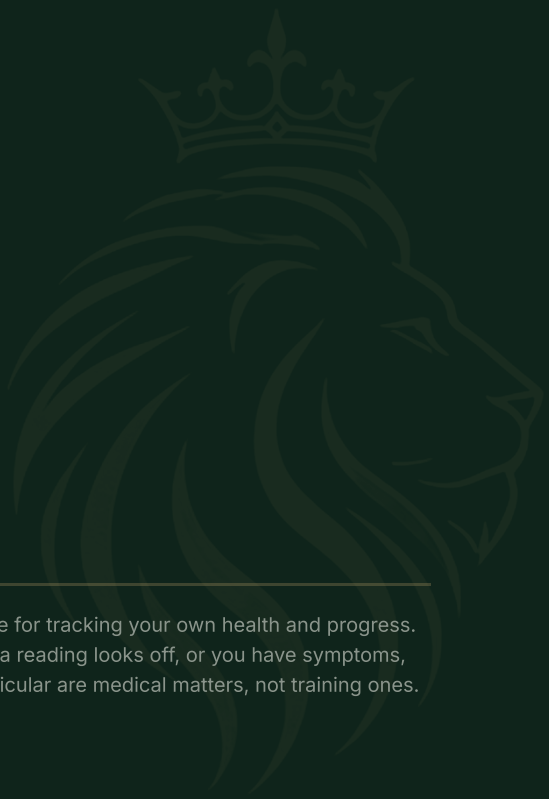

Give me these five and I will show you where you are really at, what is working, and the one change worth making next. No templates. No guesswork. No chasing a scale that was never telling you the truth.

This is where every single plan I write begins. It is the reason my clients stop spinning their wheels and start moving in a straight line.

Monitoring guidance, not medical advice. The markers here are for tracking your own health and progress. Dose and compound decisions sit with you and your doctor. If a reading looks off, or you have symptoms, see a qualified professional. Blood pressure and bloods in particular are medical matters, not training ones.
